

Doing Research is Like _____

[00:00:02]

[Beginning of Recorded Material]

Marisol Palaez: Doing research is like being in a long-term relationship. [Laughs] It requires a lot of time and a lot of effort. It's something that, as you go, you kind of get better at it.

Khambrel Roach: Doing research is like having to clean your room when it's messy, but the end result is satisfying.

Victor Vo: Doing research is like scuba diving, [00:00:30] because I have to basically swim through a lot of clutter sometimes in order to get to the information I'm looking for. And there's just so much out there, but I don't need everything. I need a particular thing, and that's what I'm after.

Marek Bruckner: Doing research is like shopping when you have to find something specific. You don't want to do it, and you have to try on lots of different things, [00:01:00] but once you find the thing you're looking for, you feel very accomplished.

Kenneth Carruthers: Doing research is like an investigation. It's almost like detective work, getting all your sources together in one place, and then picking out the ones you really need, and then putting it into a finished product.

Austen Hall: Research is like baking an extremely complicated cake where there are no [00:01:30] prescribed ingredients, so you know what you want your cake to be, but you have to go through different ingredients and test the quality of each one, consider how it's going to fit into your overall cake. So, you have to gather all the ingredients and then put them together in an interesting way to make a delicious, tasty research cake.
